Library update

The library is now operating in two locations and staff will be delighted to see you there, or to assist you over the phone. A portion of the book collection (including all the Student Reserve collection) is now available and many resources are also available online to CDHB computers. Most of the articles in the attached list are available so long as you are using a computer on the CDHB intranet, just look for the symbol beside the reference. Articles can also be downloaded using the computer in Ward 30 but please bring a USB flashdrive with you.

The JBI databases are an invaluable source of nursing research. The databases, which include the JBI Library of Systematic Reviews, Best Practice Information Sheets, Evidence Summaries and Evidence Based Recommended Practices, are all available to CDHB staff and to University of Otago staff and students through the above URL, or using the link found on the library’s Databases webpage. CDHB staff may find that they need an additional password which can be obtained from library staff.

Catch up on the news
http://news.google.co.nz/news/
Google News brings together a timely collection of news sites (Radio NZ, Stuff, NZ Herald, various overseas newspapers and news channels) in a very useful format. Articles contain text, photos and video. Links on the left allow you to limit the display by subject type. Log in to personalise the site by adding keywords to retrieve stories using these words.
The symbol indicates that the article was available online at the time this list was published. To access an online journal article, select the View Library & Manuals option from the CDHB intranet, link through to the Electronic journals portal, then search by journal title to find the specific volume and article.
