Bringing primary health care professionals together, to collaborate in learning and in care. For nurses, GPs, pharmacists, managers and all health professionals working in primary care.

New Zealand Primary Health Care

PRHC 701

This paper explores the principles and practice of modern primary health care as an integral part of New Zealand's health system, working to address inequity and reduce disparities in health outcomes. It considers population health, equity and ethics in primary care practice; and quality and safety in primary care, and interprofessional workforce capability.

Strategy and Leadership in Primary Health Care

PRHC 703

This paper applies primary health care principles to New Zealand practice, using strategic approaches and developing leadership skills for best patient care. Principles are applied by participants to the particular communities they work in. There is emphasis on: current system and policy frameworks; development of strategy that improves day-to-day practice and patient care; advanced leadership and teamwork skills; and managing change in primary care practice.
