WELLINGTON

Celebrating 20 years of Public Health Summer School

The future of child health research

The community's needs and expectations of health research have changed in recent years, leaving health researchers at a crossroads. This presentation will explore the changing context in which researchers operate, and propose how research institutions in the future might look.

Professor Jonathan Carapetis

Paediatrician and Director of the Telethon Kids Institute, as well as holding positions at the University of Western Australia and Princess Margaret Hospital for Children in Perth. He is a leading child health researcher with a particular interest in prevention and control of rheumatic fever and other infections of childhood. His work has focussed on the health needs of Aboriginal communities and populations in developing countries.
