

Lexington books, an imprint of Rowman and Littlefield, is pleased to announce a new book series: Critical Perspectives on the Psychology of Sexuality, Gender, and Queer Studies. The series editors invite manuscript proposals that denaturalize, problematize, and deconstruct the ways in which psychological scholarship has traditionally thought about bodies, identities, and experience, with a focus on sex, gender, and sexuality. The series seeks to publish scholarship that engages critically with the social and political uses of psychological knowledge, and with transformative paradigms that address obstacles to change. The series is open to a wide range of approaches that may be classified as 'psychological', including manuscript proposals that focus on any of: wellbeing, health, subjectivities, clinical practice, discourse, and representation.

Critical Perspectives on the Psychology of Sexuality, Gender, and Queer Studies

Series Editors: Rebecca Stringer, Damien W. Riggs and A.L. Jones

More information about proposals and the series advisory board available at : <https://tinyurl.com/SGQlex>