

How do pharmacists contribute to the compassionate budget?

A study on unfunded services

We are conducting a study through the School of Pharmacy, University of Otago, looking at the unfunded services that community pharmacies around the country are providing to their patients and what these services add to patients' health. These are services that pharmacists are not reimbursed for by the government, insurance companies or paid for by patients. What are the motives that pharmacists have for providing these services and what do they mean for patient health outcomes? We would like to hear from pharmacists about their experiences and stories in how they help patients in ways that the health sector may not be aware.

Join us for a focus group discussion (approx 60 minutes)

Tuesday 23 January 2018, 6:30 pm

School of Pharmacy, Adams Building, 18 Frederick Street, North Dunedin Level 7, Room 713

For more information about the project, please contact Yasmin Abdul Aziz (pharmacist and PhD candidate)
yasmin.abdulaziz@postgrad.otago.ac.nz