In our Tofa Sa’ili we are assisted by the logic of tofa fetala’i, which is the wisdom of finding relevance and context; a wisdom that sees value in change. Each day, each year, each decade, we are faced with new contexts that will question the validity or sense of existing rules, policies and values. Each day, year or decade we must be able to assess and evaluate the wisdom of holding on to, changing or letting go of one or the other. The challenge is in knowing how, when and why change should happen and how, when and why it should not.

The development of the University of Otago’s Pacific Strategic Framework 2022-2030 marks another significant milestone for the University and its engagement with a diverse Pacific community, both nationally and regionally. It builds on the foundational work established in the first Pacific Strategic Framework 2013-2020, and highlights that each piece of work is a stepping-stone on a much longer journey.

This is an ambitious Framework, and that is exactly what it should be. It aligns with the University of Otago’s position as a premier university of the Pacific. A university that is accountable to the wider community it serves and one that embraces the changing demographics within Aotearoa New Zealand. A university that is ready to face and help address rapidly evolving global environmental and societal challenges. The Framework has been developed with a future in mind that requires flexibility, agility, responsiveness, transdisciplinary and courage. Critically, it is centred on equity.

The Framework identifies three key values and five overriding goals that guide and inform the University’s approach and actions. These are supported, in turn, by an Action Plan. The goals reflect the importance of inclusive leadership, the building of leadership capacity and capability, the strengthening of support services and structures, support for by-Pacific-for-Pacific research, and the enhancement of external connections and visibility of the University.

I am very aware that it is the leadership that sets the culture of an organisation, and there is deep commitment to the Framework from within the University. All staff have their part to play in realising the aspirations underpinning our Pacific Strategic Framework. We acknowledge the many hands and teamwork required to steer our vaka (sailing boat) towards making these aspirations a reality for our Pacific students, staff and communities.

Professor David Murdoch
Vice-Chancellor
Introduction

Universities worldwide are operating within rapidly evolving global environments and responding to new challenges, including technological advances, emerging market trends and demands, global pandemics and environmental changes. In order to remain responsive and agile, the University will need to use principles of transformation to continuously become more flexible to meet these rapid social and environmental changes. Utilising deliberate design driven adaptations will support a greater focus on University’s being able to meet and service future students’ needs and aspirations.

The University of Otago’s Pacific Strategic Framework 2022 – 2030 is developed with this new future in mind. It builds on the significant work completed in the very first Pacific Strategic Framework 2013 – 2020*. The new framework will embrace the changing demographic trends of Aotearoa New Zealand’s population and is focussed on achieving academic excellence, equitable access and retention of indigenous Pacific students. It recognises that, strengthening and celebrating the knowledge, skills and capabilities of Pacific students will prepare Aotearoa New Zealand’s and the future global workforce to be influential and responsible entrepreneurial citizens.

The University of Otago is confident in its place within the Pacific, and being of the Pacific, and leading the Pacific in teaching, research, community engagements and acting sustainably to secure its future in the Pacific as the premier University of the region. The key values and five goals that are outlined in this Framework, will guide and inform the University’s approach and actions. The following Pacific values of Equity, Inclusivity and Responsiveness will underpin an agile, dynamic and transformative University.

Pacific students are increasingly discerning, passionate and active global citizens who demand inclusivity, quality teaching and outstanding support services. An expansive strategic, long term vision that focusses on celebrating and supporting Pacific excellence has been developed with these aspirations in mind.

*The University of Otago Council approved the Pacific Strategic Framework extension to 2021.

LEADERSHIP
Demonstrating Inclusive Leadership

Developing both Pacific and non-Pacific leadership capacities and capabilities in the delivery of high quality education for Pacific students. Ensuring all students and staff are welcomed and enjoy an inclusive campus culture, spaces and environments. Leading an equity ethos as leaders of a 21st Century University.

Observation

Leadership that reflects the diversity of the University’s stakeholders, will be pivotal to achieving the University’s vision and mission.

Leadership training and support for more Pacific staff to develop into University leadership positions and recognising their skill sets in professional development processes. University leadership who can champion Pacific issues across the University will continue to be important to the successful implementation of this framework.

This will require a focus on building the cultural intelligence of all University staff and an organisational commitment to University values of respect, integrity, curiosity and community, including celebrating, strengthening and valuing diversity and inclusivity.

1.1 Demonstrate visible and proactive commitment from the Vice-Chancellor and the executive group.

1.2 Enhance organisational Pacific leadership at governance, management and academic levels.

1.3 Support the work of the Pacific Development Office to monitor the progress and support the implementation of the Pacific Strategic Framework.

1.4 Establish the Pacific Strategic Framework as a key reference document for planning at central levels and for academic and service divisional levels.

1.5 Establish the Pacific Leadership Group for connecting leadership across the academic and service divisions.

1.6 Responding to Pacific peoples’ Treaty obligations, ensure appropriate engagement with the University’s Māori leadership, including Pacific peoples’ building capacity for Māori tikanga and te reo.

1.7 Provide all staff with opportunities for Pacific-focused professional development. i.e. dedicated training programmes, workshops, including an introductory Pacific World summer school paper.

1.9 Support Pacific student leadership through University of Otago Pacific Island Students Association (UOPISA), and other Pacific student associations, including fostering Pacific leadership skills.
GOAL 2
ACADEMIC EXCELLENCE
Academic Excellence and Developments

Strengthening targeted supports in order to increase levels of participation, retention and graduands, including enhanced Pacific programmes, curriculums, pedagogies and Pacific staff levels.

Observation

Pacific New Zealanders represent a very youthful population group, which means that over the next 20 years, they will make up a large proportion of aspiring tertiary students in New Zealand. Pacific students entering tertiary level studies will continue to require further supports throughout their tertiary studies journey, including recruitment, course selections, social, cultural, well-being and academic transitions, academic progressions, through to graduations and career development supports.

There are also changing demands for particular skill-sets from businesses, employers, communities and students and in order to meet these needs the University needs to be dynamic and agile in how it responds. The University will also need to anticipate different approaches to learning that may involve for example, providing flexible, blended or distance-learning in order to take advantage of new and emerging technologies and to cross any physical barriers. Parity of access, retention and achievement will continue to be goals for Pacific students at the University of Otago. Interventions that are purposefully designed with best evidence and practices, with continuous evaluation for efficacy and/or adaptations will be offered. Strengthening Pacific cultural intelligence across the University will help ensure that Pacific cultural world views are understood, appreciated and incorporated into pedagogies.

Response

2.1 Monitor the Government’s Pacific education strategy and ensure key messages are in the University’s planning frameworks.

2.2 Maintain accurate data on the University’s Pacific student and staff body and on national and international Pacific student numbers and trends.

2.3 Review best practice models from other tertiary education organisations to inform and enhance support services for Pacific students.

2.4 Deliver targeted and tailored academic support programmes for Pacific students, with continuous evaluation mechanisms built into interventions i.e. Kickstart Pacific transition programme.

2.5 Enhance mechanisms for early identification of issues for Pacific students for the purposes of intervention and support.

2.6 Review the Mirror on Society Selection Policy for health sciences programme and its Pacific student support unit, with best practice to be shared widely. This includes the exploration for adapting this policy to other competitive entry programmes like Law and Teaching qualifications.

2.7 Develop a Pacific Pathways Course with possible delivery across multiple campuses and using a variety of teaching modes, i.e. Distance learning, flexible or blended.

2.8 Support the work of the Pacific Islands Centre and the Divisional Associate Deans Pacific and their respective student support offices in delivering pastoral and academic support programmes for Pacific students, including multi-campus locations.

2.9 Promote the inclusion of Pacific content, perspectives and Pacific pedagogies in the University’s curricula.

2.10 Establish a specific science, technology, engineering and mathematics STEM-based outreach programme for prospective Pacific students.
GOAL 3
RESEARCH
Increasing Pacific Research Excellence

Encourage by-Pacific-for-Pacific research excellence, supporting Pacific research that respond to development aspirations and enact the Pacific Research Protocols; graduating more Pacific postgraduate students and increasing staff and postgraduate students’ research contributions in Pacific matters in New Zealand, the Pacific region and globally.

Observation

Multi-disciplinary research and research involving external partners will be key to solving the most pressing issues facing Aotearoa New Zealand, the Pacific region and globally. Research that meets the needs of its communities is valued and are important for progressions in all systems including business, political, social, cultural, health and education sectors.

Pacific excellence can be celebrated through the University’s ability to secure research investment for Pacific research and for Pacific researchers to progress into leading research enterprise within the institution. New knowledge fostered through innovative research ideas and ways of doing research, and which can be impactful for Pacific communities and nations, will contribute to this University’s reputation for research excellence.

3.7 Develop a skills development work programme tailored for Pacific postgraduate students and Pacific academic supervisors and further supports as required via the work of Graduate Research School (GRS).
3.8 Develop a communications plan for Pacific research dissemination, including features in University-wide and/or divisional research forums, communications and marketing as often as possible.
3.9 Ensure indigenous Pacific perspectives are engaged in developments of research policies at local, national, regional and global levels. This includes Pacific representation in key research governance committees and working groups.

The University of Otago operates on a guiding principle of social accountability to undertake research and teaching that supports the needs of communities and sees itself as being a part of these communities. External engagement functions therefore are about engaging outwards, outreach and building partnerships and collaborations to generate continued growth in the number of qualified, highly skilled Pacific graduates, who will continue to contribute significantly to Aotearoa New Zealand and global developments.

The University will communicate information and opportunities to Pacific communities in effective, appropriate ways. It will develop a range of strategies to improve access to university study and its accommodation offerings.

The University will continue building strong relationships with Pacific families and communities, and will provide guidance and information to prospective Pacific students to ensure they are informed, inspired and able to capture the opportunities available. The University will encourage its Pacific students, staff and alumni to act as role models and mentors in their communities.

The University is committed to building sustainable relationships, which will advance the prosperity and wellbeing of the wider Pacific region. It will look to share its wider expertise and other resources with its Pacific regional counterparts.

Flourishing partnerships may include opportunities for reciprocal teaching and research endeavours about and within the Pacific and afford opportunities for Otago students and staff to undertake further training in Pacific countries including exchanges of expertise and training in Aotearoa New Zealand.

Ensuring the safety of all students and staff on campus.

Observation

Recognising the University’s transition towards a more diverse student population with greater numbers of Pacific students making up a larger proportion of the student body, develop culturally inclusive policies, processes and built environments across the University. This includes physical spaces that are multipurpose in design, capacity and have a Pacific aesthetic that embraces the University’s and Aotearoa New Zealand’s South Pacific location and history. This extends the visual welcome to Pacific peoples onto the University campus whether as students, staff or visitors.

These spaces will embrace and encourage colleagues and peers to make their Pacific connections and create enduring histories together.

Acknowledging the finite limits of our planet, the University is working to reorient all operational activities by using sustainable principles and practices. Centralised student services will be developed by being informed by consistent connections to Pacific students, staff and stakeholders to understand their needs. Operational matters and support of University systems will take on deliberate design driven adaptations for diverse needs.

With greater diversity, comes greater responsibilities for all members of the University to embrace the opportunities to learn more about each other, to create safe campuses free from discrimination or harassment for all.
